Community Resilience Planning: Rural

Working Definitions:

Resilience describes the capacity of communities to function, so that the people living and working in a community— particularly the poor and vulnerable – survive and thrive no matter what stresses or shocks they encounter.

Community Resilience Planning: Rural

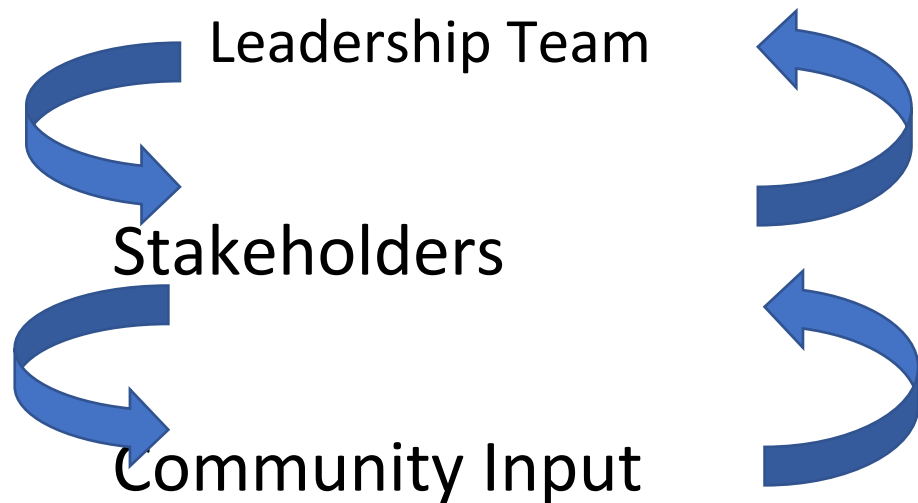

The typical resilience planning efforts and designs are urban based. Those processes must be adapted to address the lack of capacity and resources in rural communities.

RCDCC has done this but only up to a point. Each community needs to consider its unique issues and how to develop a resilience plan that can succeed:

1. Create a plan that has significant input from all segments of the community, with a strong and active Leadership Team.
2. The Plan can be implemented

The Players:

The Process:

- ✓ Groundwork
- ✓ Getting Started
- ✓ Assessment
- ✓ Determine Goals and Objective
- ✓ The Plan
- ✓ Implementation
